The precious metals receive less attention from statisticians than other products. There is an abundance of tables and oceans of figures, but there is no possibility of getting them anywhere near correct. In Nevada the bullion tax, which is assessed under a swern statement from the efficers of the mines, gives pretty nearly the correct figures, and if California had the same it would give an opportunity fer more exact knewledge. Wells, Fargo's express company keep an account of all shipments, which is the safest guide we have for the gold crop; but there are a great many false figures given them. Some miners habitually underestimate their shipments in order to have less expense to pay, but nearly every one does the opposite, committed by people trying to bull or bear their stock, and part of the diffibe ascertained, as in all articles the
